Jim Fielder calls his Altec a "tight" speaker.

We talked to Jim Fielder, bassist with Blood, Sweat and Tears, between concerts the other day about his Altec 421A speakers. Here's what he said.

"The cone doesn't flap around like in some speakers ...it's what I call a tight speaker. The first thing I look for is good solid distortion free response... and this one has it. Plus, it has a real good bottom end...but not too heavy."

Jim didn't talk about his big 17 pound magnet structure. But you need a big magnet to control the movement of a 15 inch speaker cone like in his Altec 421A. And it's that control that gives him the tight sound...so that his music can be heard and not just felt.

Whether you're upgrading your old amp to put out a better concert sound or buying a brand-new one, insist on Altec. We also make a 10, 12 and 15 inch guitar speaker. And they're all good.
